DEFENSE ORIENTATION CONFERENCE ASSOCIATION

DOCA is so closely linked with the Joint Civilian Orientation Conference that it is necessary to briefly review that program in order to fully understand the origin and objectives of DOCA.

The Joint Civilian Orientation Conference

The Joint Civilian Orientation Conference (JCOC) was initiated in 1948 by the Defense Department under the first Secretary of Defense, James Forrestal. The JCOC is an official program of the Department of Defense to acquaint leading citizens from all parts of the country representing industry, the professions, and other primary categories of civilian endeavor with the programs and policies of the Defense Department as they relate to our national defense. The Conference consists of a high-level briefing held in the Pentagon and field trips to different military installations—one each for the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps—to present the important aspects of each branch of the service. The Conference lasts one week to ten days with the result that the participants receive a thorough indoctrination and orientation of the scope and responsibilities of our national defense. It is the general idea that, through these men, a large important segment of the American public will be given a better understanding of our military posture.

Each man who has participated in a JCOC feels deeply indebted for having been accorded the high honor by the Secretary of Defense of reviewing firsthand the military organizations and defense concepts of our country and having been given a frank appraisal of the awesome tasks and attendant problems faced by the military services. Most are greatly impressed with how little they had understood about national defense and they completed the Conference with a renewed confidence in our Armed Forces and with the determination to "go out and tell others about it." A large percentage of these men had a sincere desire to continue their interest and, on their own initiative and at their own expense, organized the Defense Orientation Conference Association.

The Defense Orientation Conference Association

The Defense Orientation Conference Association (DOCA) was founded on March 30, 1952, by participants in the Joint Civilian Orientation Conferences after eleven such conferences were held. DOCA is a non-political, non-partisan, non-profit association directed toward the interest of national defense without special advocacy of any particular military service or defense concept. It is completely independent and is not sponsored by the Department of Defense . . . to provide a means of continuing the education of its members as to matters pertaining to national security under the direct jurisdiction and supervision of the Department of Defense . . . to enable them to pass on such information to others . . . to provide a permanent medium for cooperation between its members and the Department of Defense . . . and to continue the friendly relationships among members of all Conferences.

DOCA is an unique organization, blessed with an abundance of top-flight material. Membership is a personal privilege, completely restricted to the comparatively few men who have been carefully selected by the Secretary of Defense and invited to participate in a Joint Civilian Orientation Conference. Membership has no connection with business, political or religious affiliation. The members seek no special favors, they curry no political advantages, and they want no material gains. Their objectives are solely in the interest of our country—to aid whenever and wherever possible, individually or collectively. At the same time, they reserve the right to be impartial, regardless. To measure in tangible values what good this group can do is somewhat difficult, but when hundreds of dedicated individuals of the stature of this membership band together in a cause very vital to our nation, the results are many.

The affairs of DOCA are managed by a Board of Directors who are appointed to office at the annual business meeting. An Executive Committee, composed of the President, the Chairman of the Board, two immediate past Presidents, Executive Vice President, six Regional Vice Presidents, and the Secretary-Treasurer, has the authority to act on all matters between meetings of the Board of Directors. None of the officers or directors receives any salary, expenses, or is reimbursed in any manner for the time given or money expended in behalf of the Association. They feel that the honor of being elected to serve is ample recompense.

Association activity is administered by a staff from the Headquarters Office in Washington. The staff consists of a Managing Director and one stenographer, both employed on a full-time basis. These are the only paid employees of the Association.

In all planning the foremost thought has been to keep DOCA distinct and far away from the conventional associations with multi-committees and top-heavy staffs.

To accomplish the end objectives of DOCA it is necessary to provide its members the opportunity to continue the education engendered by the JCOC. The responsibility for this rests with the Board of Directors for planning and with the Headquarters staff for implementation. This is accomplished by publication of written material, making available visual aids, scheduling on-the-spot briefings on various phases of national defense and full briefings at the annual meeting. When these have been provided, it becomes the responsibility of the individual members to carry out DOCA's objectives.
